Our E-Collar Philosophy

We use e-collars for two key reasons. The first reason is rooted in the fact that all of the dogs we develop are likely to be sold. Considering the high probability that an e-collar will be utilized by the new owners at some point, it becomes crucial for us to ensure that these dogs are properly conditioned to the e-collar. By doing this, the impact of improper use on the dog is not as drastic. We firmly believe that this approach serves as a protective measure for our dogs once they are sold; safeguarding their well-being.

The second reason we incorporate e-collars into our training is that it takes our hands off the dog. When used correctly, the e-collar presents pressure and allows the dog to make choices. Allowing dogs to make choices aids the dog in responding to the pressure of commands more effectively. It eliminates any confusion that may arise from variations in human communication through vocal and body language.

Once the e-collar conditioning phase is completed, we rarely rely on the e-collar during field work. At this stage, our aim is to establish a strong relationship with the dogs, where corrections are personalized and tailored to their specific needs. We want to deepen the connection and trust between the handler and the dog, so any necessary corrections are delivered with a personal touch, emphasizing our commitment to their individual growth and development.

By utilizing e-collars for the aforementioned reasons, we strive to protect them in their future homes and enhance their learning abilities during the training process. Our ultimate goal is to establish a strong bond between handler and dog, ensuring a successful and harmonious partnership.

This E-Collar Training Clinic will show you how to apply pressure in a way that gives your dog choices. Through repetition, they make the right decision more often than not.
